Natco challenges Novartis drug patent

Krishna Yadav & Jessica Jani
NEW DELHI/MUMBAI

Hyderabad-based Natco Pharma has once again moved the Delhi High Court against the Indian Patent Office's decision to grant a patent for breast cancer drug ribociclib (Kisqali) to Novartis AG and Astex Therapeutics.

Justice Anup Jairam Bhambhani issued notice to all parties on Wednesday, and listed the case for further hearing on 16 September.

In a petition reviewed by Mint, Natco argued that the fresh patent would unfairly extend Novartis's monopoly over the medicine. The patent office's order dated 10 July 2026 rejected four pre-grant oppositions and directed the grant of the ribociclib patent with a single amended claim.

The patent application was originally filed in 2011. Under the Patents Act, a pre-grant opposition allows a challenge on a patent application before it is granted.

Natco, one of four companies that opposed the application, argued that the patent controller failed to recognise that ribociclib was already covered under Novartis's earlier patent and ignored previous court rulings.

A Novartis spokesperson said in response to Mint's queries, "Novartis remains committed to improving patient outcomes by providing quality innovative medicines such as Ribociclib to patients in India. At this point, we are unable to provide any further comment since the matter is sub judice."

Queries emailed to Natco and Astex remained unanswered till press time.

Beyond CSR, sustainability now core to biz strategy

Top CSOs say it is now critical for growth, risk management and long-term competitiveness

Sustainability is no longer seen just as a compliance exercise by India Inc. Companies are increasingly embedding it into core business strategy, with top executives saying it is critical for growth, risk management and long-term competitiveness.

At the Mint Sustainability Summit 2026, chief sustainability officers (CSOs) from some of India's largest business groups—including Aditya Birla Group, Tata Sons, Mahindra Group, JK Organisation, Piramal Pharma and Eternal—said sustainability is now as much about opportunity and resilience as it is about environmental responsibility. And, in some cases, it's also about business survival.

Piramal Pharma, whose businesses span contract development and manufacturing, complex hospital generics and consumer healthcare, chose to operate some units on biomass despite coal being the cheaper alternative.

Ganesh Tripathy, global head of sustainability and EHS at Piramal Pharma, said sustainability initiatives should extend beyond business benefits and create societal value. "We realized that if we want to do good and be in the top tier of sustainable companies, we have to take the bullets ourselves... Sustainability shouldn't just be something that's good for the business... it should be good for mankind." The company's share of green energy operations has risen from 7% to 26% in just three years.

Tata Sons' sustainability journey gathered momentum in 2021 with Project Aalingana, its roadmap for net-zero emissions by 2045 while investing in technologies for the future. Chacko Thomas, group CSO, said the auto business has a balance score that carries a meaningful weight tied to sustainability, which directly affects bonuses.

Not every sustainability initiative, however, gets immediate board nod.

Energy efficiency and renewable more engagement on. From a climate risk perspective for India, heat and its impact on labour productivity... Those are the areas where you really need to do a little bit more effort beyond the obvious things," said Ankit Todi, CSO at the Mahindra group.

When a good idea fails, its best to admit it went wrong. Deepinder Goyal's-Eternal built rest shelters for delivery partners, with phone charge points and washrooms. But they went unused, as the shelters were not on the partners' routes.

"It's not the spend that people resist. It's the return on it. And is it really moving the needle on experience?" said Anjali Ravikumar, Eternal's CSO. The firm then changed its approach and partnered with fuel stations and restaurants for its delivery partners to take a stop.

JK Organisation, which is into tyres, cement and paper, believes India's sustainability regulations are relatively limited. A.K. Makkar, group CSO, said Business Responsibility and Sustainability Reporting remains the primary mandate, with carbon trading likely to be the next major regulatory milestone.

Deeksha Vats, group CSO at Aditya Birla Group, said the CSO's has evolved into that of a strategic advisor, helping businesses navigate changing regulations, risks and opportunities.

Why India's talent pipeline falls short in sustainability

Krishna Yadav

NEW DELHI

Anushree Poddar, programme director, PGP in sustainability & biz mgmt, Masters' Union.

A growing disconnect between what universities teach and what businesses need is creating a talent gap in India's sustainability sector, Anushree Poddar, programme director of the PGP in Sustainability & Business Management at Masters' Union, said at the fifth edition of the Mint Sustainability Impact Summit held in Mumbai recently.

Delivering a special address on Bridging Academia and Industry: Rethinking Higher Education for Sustainability, Poddar said companies are increasingly struggling to find professionals who understand sustainability as well as business.

"There exists a great gap between how businesses work and integrate sustainability, and how sustainability is being taught," she said.

She added that the first challenge lies in "the curriculum and what is being taught in the classes."

According to Poddar, employers are often forced to choose between business graduates with little sustainability knowledge and sustainability graduates with limited business understanding.

"Either you find a business graduate whom you can recruit or somebody who understands sustainability, but not really a bridge between both of that," she said.

Recruiters often have to train new hires because "either there is a missing skill in the CV or they just know about business", she said.

Drawing from her own career, Poddar said she journeyed from studying commerce at Delhi University to pursuing a PhD at TERI University, followed by roles in academia and Samsung Electronics' CSR division.

This progression helped her in recognising the widening gap between sustainability education and what the industry needs.

"There has to be a complete integration of ESG, climate finance and carbon markets, renewable energy, circular economy and waste management, agri-tech and supply chain, merged with business models, AI in business, then communications and storytelling," she said.

Poddar's remarks come as demand for sustainability professionals continues to rise.

According to LinkedIn's Green Skills Report 2025, India's hiring rate for green talent is 59.7% higher than that of the overall workforce.
